Since the husband saw a couple of rats when going into the attic for some stored items a search begun immediately. An investigation by a professional would begin by looking for telltale signs of droppings, urine, nests and dead rats in the Crawlspace/Attic. The Insulation could be damaged by the rat's feces and urine causing a nasty odor. Airborne germs are now going through the entire house creating a health hazard. Another worry for the homeowner was that there may be another rat infestation close to the house. Sheds, attached and unattached garages and other storage areas were also checked. It was top priority to do a thorough perimeter check for any openings such as, holes, cracks and crevices that are giving the rodents access. This is a crucial step because by closing holes and sealing cracks and crevices prevents further entry into the house.

Rat Infestation can will cause costly damage when the yucky pest makes itself comfortable in a home or other outside structures. Unfortunately there are so many ways that rats can gain access to a home or building. Rats can fit through holes the size of a quarter with no problem. An example of a costly damage would be having to remove soiled insulation and installing new insulation. The attic and crawlspace will need to be thoroughly cleaned. Rats and mice create stains and unpleasant odors and there would be a need to deodorize areas affected. All entry points around the outside need to be checked for entry points and sealed.
