

Mice Caught on Camera at Waterford Hospital

A mental health advocate says he's not at all surprised to hear that mice have been spotted at the Waterford Hospital.

A VOCM listener snapped a few pictures of a mouse in one of the wards at the hospital during a recent visit. Mark Gruchy says he's not at all surprised by the discovery, especially given the building's age and proximity to the Waterford River.

He says while mice can happen anywhere, he's persistently heard complaints about rodents in the building over the years. He believes it would be very difficult, given the circumstances, for the building to be rodent-free.

Eastern Health admits that the Waterford does have rodents. The health authority uses mousetraps, rodent repellents both inside and outside the building, and has regular visits from Cabot Pest Control, which inspects all units weekly.
