- A rat was spotted scurrying inside a closed Dunkin' Donuts store on Wednesday at Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport
- Footage was taken by a passenger and appears to show rat on the hunt for sweet pastries

A curious rat seemingly on the hunt for some sweet pastries was caught on video while scurrying around inside a Dunkin' Donuts at a Texas airport.

The footage, taken by a passenger at Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport, shows the rat scampering across the counter during its visit to the store on Wednesday, CW33 reported.

In the short video, the rat is seen running across the counter and pausing several times before continuing on its journey.

During the time the little critter made its appearance at the doughnut and coffee chain, the store appeared to be closed.

This rat's appearance recalls some of the popular rat foodies in New York City including the unforgettable Pizza Rat and most recently Pita Rats.

Last year, a rat was spotted at a New York City subway platform snacking on what appeared to be a glazed doughnut.

In that video, 'Donut Rat' was seen dragging his delicious dessert through the station by his teeth - clearly trying to feast on the snack in a place private from his paparazzi.
